

HOOVER NEARS HIS CALIFORNIA HOME, THERE TO VOTE AND AWAIT MANDATE OF THE PEOPLE OF UNITED STATES

Chief Executive Tired, With 11,000 Miles of Campaigning, Accomplished in a Month, Behind Him — Made A Strenuous Bid for Election

By George E. Durno
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
A BOARD PRESIDENTIAL SPECIAL ENROUTE TO CALIFORNIA, Nov. 8—(INS)—Husky of voice and tired of eye, Herbert Hoover neared his old west coast home this morning, there to await the mandate of the people on his claims to four more years in the White House.

Behind him were 11,000 miles of hard campaigning, accomplished in a period of a month, and constituting the most strenuous bid for re-election any incumbent president in history has made. Mid-afternoon will find the President at Palo Alto, where he and Mrs. Hoover have maintained a home on the campus of their alma mater, Stanford University, for years. There, they will vote and await the verdict.

The Executive's final appeal for vindication was before the public last night, from the edge of the Nevada desert. He had urged the nation over the radio "not to be led astray by false gods arrayed in the rainbow colors of promises," and asserted:

"It is my deep conviction that for the welfare of the United States the Republican party should continue to administer the government."

The campaign special, bearing the dust of a score of states, was due to reach Oakland, California, about 11 o'clock this morning. Mr. and Mrs. Hoover and their party will leave the train there, cross the bay by ferry to San Francisco, parade through the streets of the western gateway, lunch and then motor to Palo Alto, some forty miles away.

That the President is dead tired from the business of speaking constantly and greeting literally hundreds of thousands of people there can be no doubt. His imperturbable nerve finally gave way last night at the final rear platform appearance of his campaign at a little Nevada town named Carlin.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

Early in this decade 1,000,000 farms in the United States will be powered by electricity if the electric power industry is able to complete its stupendous expansion and development program, which is national in scope.

This complete program involves the construction of 333,000 miles of rural electric service lines at a cost of $500,000,000 and a vast expenditure for other equipment and additional generating capacity.

With a million farms operating with electricity, the purchase of $1,000,000,000 worth of electric farm and domestic machinery and appliances would be required to make the investment in rural service lines profitable to both farmers and power companies. That investment is the equivalent to employment and business running into large figures.

Rural electrification is a movement comparable to the railroad construction era of American history. For three-quarters of a century capital and labor were devoted to the building of a vast network of railroads. And just as the new railroads populated and developed the theretofore isolated interior, rural electrification will populate and develop the broad farming regions of today.

Provisions of electric service to farms means much more than the endowment of rural life with the electrical conveniences of city life. It means increased production, efficiency and economy for the farm.

Perhaps the uplifters spell it "cinema."

Prosperity Here Depends Upon Victory For Hoover

Why Pennsylvania Workers on Farm and in Factory Should Vote for Republican Success. Triumph for Entire Ticket is Predicted. Tariff Vital to Labor.

Never in the history of Pennsylvania has the necessity for a Republican victory from the top of the ticket to the bottom been so urgent as now. The re-election of Herbert Hoover as President November 8 and the continuation of conservative Republican policies in the state and nation are essential to the prosperity of wage earners in agriculture, in mines, in factories and in industry in general.

CHARLES A. WATERS

Wide and far reaching steps already taken to stem the depression and restore normal conditions with widespread employment at good wages should not be checked by the introduction of fantastic and dangerous Democratic theories.

The people of Pennsylvania should not think of changing pilots now. Conditions would have been far worse than they are now had it not been for the vigorous efforts of President Hoover to preserve the credit of the country and avoid the calamity threatened. Had the United States been allowed to go off the gold standard and had the Democrats in Congress been allowed to foist flat money upon the American people the collapse would have been complete and the misery and distress complete and beyond words. A Democratic triumph November 8 will renew this menace to the well being of the people of Pennsylvania.

It is vitally important that Republican candidates for the Congress be elected so that the wise policies and progressive plans of President Hoover are upheld and supported. The long experience in financial affairs of Charles A. Waters, Republican candidate for State Treasurer, and Frank E. Baldwin, for Auditor General, promise successful administrations for the tax payers of Pennsylvania.

Economy in government, both state and national, re-employment of unemployed and maintenance of the tariff for the protection of those in agriculture and industry are outstanding features of the campaign. Republican candidates have pledged drastic economy in public expenditures with the assurance of efficiency in administration. Recollection of the desperate efforts of Democrats in the Congress in the recent session to burden the taxpayers with billions of dollars of unnecessary expense should decide in the minds of the people of Pennsylvania how they will vote November 8.

If the Democrats should win they promise to reduce the tariff. This will mean disaster to wage earners in Pennsylvania, whether on the farm, in the coal mine, quarry or mill. Enormous quantities of cement are being imported into the United States because the wages in Europe with depreciated currency are so low that American manufacturers cannot compete on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts where low cost water transportation aids in the invasion of our markets. This means not only the loss of wages in the cement industry but in Pennsylvania coal mines which should furnish the fuel.

Iron and steel are coming into the United States in large quantities from abroad because the wages there are many times lower than those paid in Pennsylvania mills. This means also displacement of Pennsylvania coal and the markets for agriculture. Window glass in Belgium with the same modern machine methods in use in Pennsylvania factories is flooding the American markets on the coasts and in the Mississippi River Valley because glass can be made in Belgium for $2.05 per hundred pounds whereas the cost in Pennsylvania is $4.24 per hundred. Belgium can send its glass to Philadelphia by water from Antwerp for between 20 and 22 cents per hundred pounds whereas the rail rate from the nearest Pennsylvania factory is 32 cents. The Belgian rate by the way of Panama Canal to Pacific coast market is 36 cents per hundred pounds. The rate from Pennsylvania factories to the same points by rail to tidewater and by water through Panama canal is 61 cents.

The American window glass industry consumes 900,000 tons of coal yearly. The plate glass industry consumes the same amount and it alike is menaced by the low cost Belgian product. It is clear what these great industries mean in the employment of Pennsylvania miners and what their prosperity means to the Pennsylvania farmer and merchant.

FRANK E. BALDWIN

Japan, with wages pitifully low, is flooding the United States with window glass, electric light bulbs, china ware, pottery of all kinds and thousands of other articles at prices that spell ruin to American working people unless the tariff is increased. The Democrats promise to reduce it. Any person who thinks can figure out where the American workman will be in competition with the miserable wages of the Orient.

Every woman who inspects the thousands of necessary articles in stores throughout Pennsylvania knows that the bulk of these products are made by the low paid workers of Belgium, Japan and Czechoslovakia. All of this means idleness for Pennsylvania workers.

The only safe way for Pennsylvania voters to insure economy of government and the employment at good wages of Pennsylvania workers is to vote for President Hoover November 8 and the entire Republican ticket.

Daphne by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

CHAPTER LV.

WHEN Daphne had banged at the door for nearly five minutes, and was just about to give up, Flora opened it—quite casually—as if in answer to a first timid knock.

"Why, it's Daphne. Come on in. What's the grief. I see you've been crying," she drawled, the inevitable cigarette wabbling as she talked. And then as Daphne hesitated, taken aback, she laughed and pulled her inside the door. "Never mind, I won't cross-question you. Besides, I know why you've come. Viola sent you. I've been disturbing the peace!"

"Viola did send me," the younger girl admitted, slumping into the nearest chair. She wanted to put her arms around Flora, to comfort her, but she didn't know how to start. You were always just too late to sympathize with Flora's tragedies. By the time you found out about them Flora was her old devil-may-care self. "Is it about Mr. Webb?" she asked anxiously, noting that the engagement ring had been dropped into the litter of pins and hair pins on a tarnished silver tray.

"Was I crying about Mr. Webb?" Flora repeated going to the mirror, and fopping pink powder on her ravaged, streaked face. "Mr. Webb—of Webb and Wunzer—I should say not. The very thought of him cheers me up. Is the poor fish downstairs now? Is that it?"

"Oh, no, Flora—oh no!" Flora said with conviction. "God save the poor idiot. I'll be after him stronger than ever, as I get my nerve back. It's a good thing you weren't around a while ago. A couple of the boys from the paper dropped in on their way from work with some news for me, and they had a pint to cheer me up, so I brought them up here, and we might have made a little noise—anyway, Spellman and Halliday banged on the walls, and Viola came up."

"Oh, Flora, you shouldn't have!"

"No, I suppose not. But I got some bad news. Or it will be bad news if it catches up with me—Some of my dear, dead past come to life, and in hot pursuit just when I'm most occupied with the present. So after the boys had gone I got to feeling sorry for myself, and the gin and all—maybe it was only a crying jag—" She laughed and added more powder to her tear-streaked face. "Never mind, it's all over. I'm all right now. What were you fussing about?"

"Oh, nothing—just everything," Daphne said. How could she tell Flora?

"Well, it's a hell of a world," Flora decided, and I'm going to bed. You better do the same. Tomorrow is another day."

The telephone rang. "For Miss McCordle," Mrs. Halliday announced, with dignity.

"Flora has gone to bed," Daphne said, on her way to her own room. That was just the beginning.

Flora went to bed every night right after dinner and refused to answer the telephone, or to dress and see Mr. Webb when he called and waited, red and embarrassed, in the hall.

"She's indisposed," Miss Viola explained, all flustered because Mr. Porter Webb himself, of Webb and Wunzer, was in her hallway. Even Flora's late indiscretion faded at sight of the eminently respectable caller.

"But surely—if she knows that it is I?" he'd begin, all embarrassed, and mopping at his red face above the stiff white collar. And romantic Viola would wheeze upstairs, hoping her old slippers wouldn't show, to talk to Flora through the keyhole.

"He's downstairs!"

"Who?"

"Mr. Webb."

"Tell him I'm in bed. I'm tired."

"I did, but he says, could you see him?"

A loud snicker from Flora. "I could not. If I did the Spellmans would move."

"Oh no, I'd explain—"

"Well, just explain I'm in bed, and got rid of him, there's a love."

So that was all Viola could get out of her, which was discouraging, to say the least. "He'll get another girl," she told Flora, heavily playful.

"As if I care," said Flora.

And that, as Mrs. Halliday and Mrs. Spellman agreed, was no way to treat your fiancée, especially when he's given you a diamond as big as a headlight.

"Foolishness!" old Mrs. Hinkle clumped upstairs to tell her. "Dot's no way to do, aber—"

"Go away, my head aches!" Flora hissed through the keyhole. So they had to send Mr. Webb away, and he looked so crestfallen, going down the front stairs in his neat tweed suit and carefully placed hat, that chicken-hearted Viola could hardly keep back the tears.

"I've seen better looking men," she said, "but never any more stylish. He's an elegant dresser, and he sure has a good taste in candy!" Viola could vouch for that, for the ornate satin boxes he brought for Flora were all passed unopened to her.

"Candy makes me sick," Flora said.

Mrs. Halliday and Mrs. Spellman exchanged knowing looks. "Well, I must say," Mrs. Halliday began—and let it rest there, delicately.

"Do you think?"

"My dear, would anything else explain. I remember my sister, the very sight of candy—"

"Then why don't she marry him?" demanded the eminently practical Spellman.

"Shh—Miss Haines—"

Daphne was always bumping into them, gossiping in the halls. Whispers. Meaning looks. They were all talking about Flora. And Flora, deaf or indifferent to what they were saying about her, gossiped by the hour to Daphne about everybody else. People whom Daphne had never heard about. Strangers from Flora's queer, upside-down world. She seemed determined to give no thought to her own trouble, whatever it was.

Sometimes she talked about Crystal Garroty. "I saw her coming out of the St. Francis yesterday with a little fat man. Awfully attentive. He's probably a new sugar papa—" Daphne's spirits would soar. She'd permit herself another peek at Ralph's picture in the locked black box, as she went about the dull task of copying old papers next day in the office. If Crystal married someone else . . .

anything could happen . . . anything.

And then next night, when she'd come home in high spirits, full of hope, planning Crystal's wedding to some middle-aged millionaire, Flora would send all her air-castles tumbling down a careless, "Well, I hear that Avery Woodward, that cracked pot, your dear sister was so crazy about, has gone back to Amelia Beecher. That is, he's starting a new portrait of her, which amounts to the same thing.

WRAPLETS OF FUR TO GUARD WOMEN FROM ICY BLASTS

Variety of Furs for Such Shown by All Designers

By Alice Langeller
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
PARIS.—The tiniest and snuggest little fur wraplets are going to keep chic women warm this winter.

Miniature jackets of seal, mink, ermine, Persian lamb, caracul and beaver are being shown at the smart designers. They slip over the big coat, the tailleur or the coat-trunk when extra warmth is needed and the 1933 edition is known by its shorter length and greater sleeve chic. In fact, practically all the trim comes there by way of little capelets, balloon effects, etc.

A little wraplet in black Alaskan seal has full cape-sleeves and little bow-tie in front. A dressier one in white ermine has sleeves gathered slightly at the armholes and buttons at the left side-back.

More sportlike are miniature wraplets of leopard, nutria and the good old familiar bunny rabbit.

With velvet coat-cape baumarten and sable are luxury vogues. And there are some straight scarves made of fur-tails and put through rings of fur or zebra stripes fashioned into short cravats to match berets of the same. Real seal and golden otter make effective trim with dull prune autumn colors.

THRILLING MOMENTS END IN BLANK SCORE

CROYDON, Nov. 8.—Many thrilling moments with long gains through the line and in the air but not a score on either side, marked the gridiron battle between Croydon and Ivy A. C. at Eddington field Sunday. The goose egg score still leaves the Croydonites with only one defeat in six games this season.

With the backfield clicking like a clock and the ends nailing forward passes out of the air the Croydon eleven gained much yardage throughout the game. But the Ivy team proved a stone wall at the critical moments and the locals were unable to score.

The ball traveled up and down the field throughout the first quarter. In the second quarter Coach Stiles sent in his secondary backfield with the same result. Sammy Moffo and Schwarz made several thrilling runs and line plunges but were unable to push the oval across the tape for the touchdown. In the second half the starting backfield opened up with a barrage of passes that took the ball from one end of the field to the other. Again the Ivy gridders tightened up and kept the ball from crossing the line.

Lefty Crossley made a brilliant end run that netted the homesters a 30-yard gain but on the next play the oval went to the visitors on a fumble.

Fields and Dean were the factors in the forward pass work, one pass netting the local boys 35 yards.

Stet Crossley and Charley Ludwig stood out in the defensive play breaking up trick plays time after time. Bradford, a new tackle, and Collins, also a new acquisition, starred in defensive play.

Caruso and Massell played best for the visitors, making long gains through the Croydon line. Kity starred in snaring forward passes.

Severe Sentences Meted Out to Youthful Bandits

that is true, but the public must be protected, it is the public that counts in disposing of these cases. It makes no difference what happens to you."

Both men called a number of women as character witnesses, and neither defendant took the witness stand.

"You have tried to make it harder for the Court by bringing women here as witnesses," Judge Boyer remarked. "You did not bring men who might know you and tell what you really are."

Kanterman and Bush posed as Federal agents when they robbed the Argonne Inn and the Croydon restaurant. They stole beer coils from both places, stole some money from the cash registers and robbed a number of patrons.

Joseph Dowgurl, 19, of 2704 East Ontario street, Philadelphia, the third defendant arrested in connection with the hold-ups, is in the Bucks County Prison. He did not plead guilty but will be tried at the next term of criminal court.

When sentence was pronounced by Judge Boyer, Mrs. Elizabeth Bush, young wife of one of the defendants, had to be assisted out of the court room by court attendants when she became frantic and screamed across the court room, "Don't send him away, please, don't send him away."

"The trouble is in cases like this that the violators of the law never think of their wives and mothers before they commit the crimes," Judge Boyer remarked.

SPIRIT OF HALLOWE'EN

The sky was wet and black o'erhead. The streets were veiled in misty night. It seemed as if a ghost were lurking in every corner out of sight.

The wind was whistling thru the trees. The hoot of an owl seemed very near. 'Twas a bold man that would journey forth.

For Hallowe'en once more was here.

The clock was striking half past ten in the church tower on the square; A figure lurked in the shadows dark. Unnoticed, for few were passing near; 'Twas a silent figure and very small. You would hardly notice it at all. As it stood quite still and seemed to stare

At a faint image standing near, And the town was still and very drear. For Hallowe'en once more was here.

The figure stood 'till the clock struck twelve, And then it vanished in the air— 'Twas the spirit of Hallowe'en so cold. That stood in the shadow to stare and stare;

And the wind stopped whistling in the trees, And the whole town didn't seem quite so drear,

And the people took courage and journeyed forth, For Hallowe'en was no longer here.

"THE GREAT MEADOW"

Elizabeth Madox Roberts

"The Great Meadow" is the story of the settling of the fertile land, Kentucky.

Diana is the heroine of the story and we follow her joys and sorrows throughout the book. Other characters are familiar to us from our American History. We all remember David Crockett and Daniel Boone, who played an important part in the expanding of our country. The hardships of these settlers were many, but, having the courage to endure them, made the United States what it is today.

The authoress, Elizabeth Madox Roberts, describes the bloody Indian attacks with a great deal of realism. You should read "The Great Meadow" to understand and appreciate the gifts which these men and women gave us, and to get the thrills and romance that are packed in it.

"Life is a magic vase filled to the brim; so made that you can not dip into it nor draw from it but it overflows into the hand that drops treasures into it—drop in malice and it overflows hate; drop in charity and it overflows love."—Ruskin.

WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY?

In the home, it is kindness. In business, it is honesty. In society, it is courtesy. In work, it is thoroughness. In play, it is fairness. Toward the fortunate, it is congratulation.

Toward the unfortunate, it is pity. Toward the weak, it is help. Toward the wicked, it is resistance. Toward the strong, it is trust.

Toward the penitent, it is forgiveness. Toward God—it is reverence and love.

—William DeWitt Hyde.

Bristol High Pupils "Lick Platters Clean"

It is stated at the cafeteria that approximately 400 of the full luncheon menus are served each day, in addition to the countless separate items such as soups, beverages, and desserts sold to those who carry their lunches.

During October 1,570 half-pint bottles of chocolate milk were sold, and the total sales in the period for "white" milk was 785 half-pints. Orange juice and grape juice are also in great demand among the boys and girls.

Practically all fruits and vegetables used are fresh, canned goods used in preparation of the menus being but few. "We endeavor to secure the best quality foods at the lowest possible price," stated Mrs. Jackson today.

The Prospects of the "Pro's."

FOOTBALL?

THAT'S HOW FAST THE PACE IS IN "PRO" FOOTBALL!

SMART football men agree that if you want to see the gridiron pastime played as it really should be played, you must go to see the professional pignin manipulators do their stuff.

College football, say these experts, is all very well, but, compared with the professional game, it's about on a par with minor league baseball in comparison to the big leagues.

Of course, the real question about professional football is whether it can ever hope to be a serious rival to the college game as far as public interest is concerned. No matter how high a grade of football is played among the "pros," the game will be rated a failure if it fails to really "catch on" with the public. The real difficulty which "pro" football faces in attempting to rival the popularity of the college game is the fact that the college angle provides a colorful setting and a traditional rivalry which the professionals are unable to offer.

However, many of those interested in "pro" football insist that the sport has a really great future, that it is attracting more and more of the public's attention, and that in a few years the professional game will be one of the most important pastimes in the country. The "pros" are opening up new franchises in various cities, and they seem to be quite successful as a rule.

When you consider that, with very little advance attention from the newspapers and fighting against the competition of college games, the professionals are drawing anywhere from 5,000 to 25,000 spectators in different parts of the country, you must admit that the game seems to have quite a bright future.

Famous college stars who try to make good in the "pro" ranks usually have pretty tough sailing for a couple of years, until they become seasoned to the very grueling brand of play employed by the professional footballers. A great college star such as "Red" Cagle needed a couple of years in the "pro" game in order to become of real value to the professional team.

Many famed college stars have failed to make the grade in this exceedingly fast company, and all of them learn things about football which they never dreamed of in college when they play in the professional ranks.

At any rate, even if "pro" football doesn't attain the popularity of the college sport, it will always provide real football fans with genuine enjoyment, because the professionals undoubtedly play the highest class football in the history of the gridiron sport.

Balanced menus are the order of each day, and parents can rest assured that the pupils who buy their lunches at the high school cafeteria are well-fed on quality foods.

The cafeteria is a busy place for three periods of one-half hour each, daily. From 11 to 11:30, 12 to 12:30 and 1 to 1:30 food is served. And delightful surprises are frequently in store in the form of hot biscuits or hot muffins, boiled and baked puddings. Comfortable and attractive are the dining-rooms where 170 may be seated at one time. Even the students who carry their lunches but desire hot beverages or soups or desserts to add to the home-packed meal find places among those who purchase the entire menus.

Mrs. Jackson and her assistants arrive at the building at eight a. m., and from then until about three o'clock they are kept exceedingly busy, watching out for the welfare of the inner student. The preparation and cooking of the foods, arrangements in containers, serving, the washing of dishes keeps them busy. Then when the last pupil is served, which means that there is very little food left, for the planning is most carefully done, the next day's menu is considered, and the costs of foods are gone over and the sale prices to ascertain if expenses can be met at such low prices. The cafeteria is not a money-making enterprise. It pays for itself and has but a little over each month, as the pocketbooks of pupils are being catered to.

All planning, buying and preparation are in charge of the three women who operate the cafeteria; but the bookkeeping and financial end is attended to by W. E. Shank, commercial instructor, and commercial students of the senior and junior classes. Two of this group are in the cafeteria at all times when students are being served. These young folks act as cashiers and attend to "ringing up" of sales. The machine used gives the name of the item sold and the cost, in duplicate, one slip being given to the purchaser for presentation to the cashier, and the duplicate is retained in the machine for the records. Thus a complete record of the number and variety of items sold daily is maintained. And likewise excellent experience is gained by the commercial students.

"We like to have people come to visit our cafeteria," stated one of the high school representatives today. "In this way the public will secure an idea of the big work carried on here, and of the efficient manner in which it is done."

Think Before You Vote Think Before It's Too Late

President Hoover has stood steadfast in the face of abuse on the part of rival political partisans.

For three years he has fought the depression and gained a priceless knowledge through experience.

A definite plan to aid recovery is actually installed and working. What incredible folly to throw all this experience and ability out the window.

"Economic conditions are much worse in other parts of the world; they could have been a great deal worse here than they are and would have been much worse, IF IT HAD NOT BEEN FOR THE VISION, THE COURAGE AND LEADERSHIP OF PRESIDENT HOOVER."— Ex - President Coolidge.

Shall we risk a change at the helm of Government now? On the one side with Hoover, are ability, experience and certainty of the return of normal times.

On the other, would be the experiments of a beginner, delay, doubt and an indefinite postponement of economic recovery in agriculture and industry.

—VOTE FOR—

Henry W. Watson for Congress. Member of the Ways and Means Committee, a leader in Congress, who has so ably represented Bucks County at Washington.

Bucks County would have little representation at Washington by the election of a Democratic Congressman, a non-resident of the County.

—VOTE FOR—

W. Albertson Haines and Wilson L. Yeakel for Assembly, men of experience and ability, who have faithfully looked after the interests of Bucks County at Harrisburg.

—VOTE FOR—

The Republican Candidates for United States Senator, State Treasurer, Auditor General, and Judges of the Supreme and Superior Courts.

The re-election of President Hoover means better prices for farm products, more jobs for the unemployed, less cost of Government and quicker financial and industrial recovery.
